9:00-10:30 am Current trends in nutrition: Where are we in evidence-based nutrition in public health and practice?

This presentation will discuss the definition of nutrition as well as distinguish between evidence-based ideas and nutritional myths. The critical role of scientific evidence-based dietary and nutritional counseling for patients across the entire life span- starting with the pregnant mother and moving through infancy, early childhood, elementary and middle school years, adolescence, adulthood and finally geriatric years will be discussed. Well-balanced nutrition is critical in prevention of most chronic diseases as well as in wound healing. The dental team, consisting of the dentist, dental hygienist, dental assistant and including the front desk staff must all fully understand the critical role of diet and nutrition in oral and systemic health and engage in the process of dietary and nutritional counseling for all patients. It is imperative that scientific evidence be considered and widespread myths about nutrition and their effects understood clearly by dental professionals.
